WRITTEN AT RANDOM.

It was a happy family that went out recently to the Belle Park lake to learn to swim. The father was going to act as a swimmer at the natatorium and teach the others. He is a popular steamboat engineer, and his son a safe and sure method of swimming. The father borrowed enough life preservers from the boat to supply the demand, and took a park car. Bathing suits were donned, the life preservers strapped on, and they all waded in to sink or swim, survive or perish, or else know the reason why. They found that they couldn't sink, neither could they swim, and it was very easy to learn the reason why. They simply floated about like logs, and if papa took a dive, he sometimes came up bottom side topmost, and said that way until someone caught his wiggling anatomy and kindly turned him aright in time to save him from swallowing more of the lake than he could hold. The swimming lessons have been now temporarily abandoned. They may wait until they learn how before they go in again.

The death of F. B. Lloyd, known all over the United States by his nom de plume, "Rufus Sanders," which appeared to all of his syndicate dialect sketches, brought sorrow to the heart of many an admirer. He was known to the simple country folk, and to most every one else, only as "Rufus Sanders," and they always pictured him as the fat, jovial fellow whose portrait appeared at the head of his sketches.

Strange to say, two-thirds of the country people of surrounding districts thought "Rufus Sanders" was a resident of Paducah, and many a time have they inquired of him when they came to the city. It was no doubt a great surprise to them when they learned that he was a native of Alabama, and a member of the legislature of that state.

Asked the somewhat extensive belief that "Rufus Sanders" lived in Paducah, the following colloquy overheard on the market yesterday morning early, is detailed from memory:
"Wal, hev ye heard th' news?" asked one farmer of another.
"Don't know as I hev, Bill. Ye know I jes' fetched in my wheat an' it's been no whur yit. What air it?"
"It's the somethin' extensive reply of the latter, who wore a wide straw hat, copious patches, and a dollar-a-bushel smile.
"Uncle Rufe—Rufe Sanders—air dead, Jim?"
"What! Uncle Rufe Sanders dead? Shorely ye'r mistaken er a-jokin', Bill!"
"Naw; not truth, it air; I wisht it was a joke. Uncle Rufe war assassinated down in Alabama yistiddy."
"Do tell! Say, Bill, when I read that last letter uv his'n in the paper I sez ter myself, 'Samthin' pow'ful harmful is shore goin' ter happen ter Uncle Rufe.' I jes' felt it in my bones. Pore ole feller; how we'll all miss his smilin' face from the paper!"
"Yes, we shore will."
"Yes, whur did Uncle Rufe live anyhow? I allus heard he lived sumwhur in Paduky, but I never could find him. Must hev ben a good ole man, Uncle Rufe war! Full uv good, sound sense ter ole ole ole uv us fella's."
"Yes, a pow'ful good man, I recash. Must a ben 'bout 70 year old by this time, an' I guess he war a farmer 'fore he got too old fer ter tend th' farm. Guess he moved ter Paduky then an' started ter writin' them letters."
"Wunder whur did a kilt'im? Say, Jim, du recash it war eny uv them 10 characters uv Rufe's 'Pint as don't? I allus did think sum uv 'em sound."
"Wal, he's gone now, Bill, an' we'll miss him. He kild us, 'cause he uset ter be eny uv us."
And they moved a sigh, and parted.

Several young ladies in a downtown establishment have forsown the use of their bicycles. They recently came to the conclusion that they were born under an unlucky star, so far as bikes were concerned, at any rate, for they were always meeting with some accident, having a hair-breath escape, and getting their wheels torn up. Repair bills became so large, and newspaper notices so extensive, that now they always walk to and from the store.

Col. W. Fred Long vouches for the newness of this story, which he picked up in the Bluegrass region recently.

Up in a small town not far from Frankfort resided a beautiful young woman whose most ardent admirer was a faithful young man. He let procrastination get the upper hand of him, however, and the young lady became impatient because he wouldn't propose. She finally married another young man. In the course of a few months, and before the disappointed suitor had finished kicking himself, the young husband kicked the bucket, and hope eternal sprang forth in the other fellow's breast. He was determined not to get left this time, and attended the funeral. After the mortal remains of the deceased husband had been surrounded by the sod, he turned to the weeping wife and whispered, "I was a little late the other time, but will you marry me now?"
"You're—your too late," she murmured between her sobs, "the driver of the hearse asked me before we left the church."
The young man has entered a monastery.

A person who passes along Broadway and other portions of the business part of the city early in the morning does not wonder that there is sickness in Paducah. He does wonder, however, that there is not more sickness. The porters in at least two-thirds of all the downtown establishments daily sweep into the gutter all the trash and filth from the scores and sidewalks, which clogs the gutter and keeps the water colored continually a deep black. If the gutters were cleaned out every day this would not suffice to keep them clear of filth. The proper remedy is to force people to dump their trash somewhere else.

"Talking about swift engineers," remarked a veteran engineer yesterday, as he sat astride a bench, putting at his pipe and waiting for orders, "there used to be a crack-jack on this road. It was then called the Paducah and Memphis, and the engineer was known everywhere as Dutch Charley. It was his greatest delight to get about half an hour behind time, so he could make it up. Very frequently the conductor became so alarmed at the rate of speed at which Dutch Charley was pulling him that he would pull the bell cord. "One day—and I'll never forget it—Dutch Charley was in a bad humor about something, and fairly turned the old hose loose. The conductor, Dow Olin, pulled the bell cord a time or two, and this had no very mollifying effect on Dutch Charley's temper. Finally he got mad.
"Shut wait, py chimney, I fix dot tam fool back dere!" he said to his fireman. He took the bell cord down and tied it securely to the throttle, and then let'er loose. "Directly the conductor looked up, saw how things stood, and jumped for the bell cord. He gave it a yank, and instead of ringing the bell it opened the throttle further, and the train kept going faster and faster. He pulled it again, and the throttle was opened wider than ever, and on she sped.
"Dutch Charley only sat on his box and grinned, and waited until the frantic conductor had pulled the throttle completely open. He let'er go full speed for a few minutes, and then shut'er off some, and fixed the bell cord where it belonged.
"He was afterwards killed on the Mobile and Ohio while doing some of his fancy running."

"Did you ever hear about how John Dixon got even with the negro?" resumed the engineer.
"Dixon was a well-known engineer on this road, and was very fond of fast running. He went into Fulton two minutes ahead of time one day and three minutes ahead of time into Mayfield. When he got there they pulled him off his passenger run and put him on a freight train. He found out that a colored employe 'blew' on him, and told the darkey he'd get even with him. About a week after while going into Fulton he saw the negro on the pilot of the engine. There was a car of molasses on the main line of the Illinois Central, directly across the track. Dixon opened the throttle and hit the car with a full head of steam. The negro was horribly mangled, and covered with blood and molasses. Dixon was not hurt, and got down to view the remains. 'It's a swate death ye dole,' he said, and made for the woods. That was the last ever seen of him."

"Then there was old John Hartigan, another swift engineer on the old Paducah and Memphis. Nobody ever found out what went with John," continued the speaker after he had smoked his pipe in silence for several minutes. "Did you ever hear about that time he made the quick run to Fulton? Well, Hartigan left Paducah with a passenger train one morning about 4 o'clock. It was as cold as blizzards and Will Stout sent a pint cup of whiskey up to the engineer and fireman, but he fireman didn't get a drop of that pint, for Hartigan drank it all. He left Paducah and never made a single stop between Paducah and Fulton, nor did he blow a whistle. Bill Purcell, now of Texas, was conductor, and the whole crew had to climb over the tender and the Hartigan up before the train could be stopped. He was left in the mail car and there completely demolished everything, cutting himself accidentally with broken glass. He came near dying from loss of blood."

"But the clearest case of going to sleep on duty I ever heard of occurred at Paducah Junction years ago," resumed the veteran engineer. "You see we were crowded in those days, and the road borrowed some big red wheeled engines from the Illinois Central, and several engineers to run them. About daylight one morning one of these engines, pulling a passenger train, struck a car of pig iron at the Nashville road at Paducah Junction, and the way things did fly! The engineer and fireman were both asleep, and struck her full tilt, and when the people got to the wreck the old engine was lying on her back with those red driving wheels revolving about a thousand times a second. They had to crawl under the car and shut off the steam. They never did find the engineer. Major T. T. Jones, the well known hardware man, now in business here, was on the train that day, and had to stay half a day at Paducah Junction without anything to eat. The train went down an embankment and a new track had to be built to get it up on the grade again."

Newburgh newspaper men, according to the "Journal" of that city, are considering the plan of shutting out "dead men" advertising of concerts, excursions and various entertainments by church and other organizations who go to "job printers" for tickets, handbills, etc. where they pay cash, and who visit the newspaper offices and request the publication (several times in some cases) of "notices" of the events, for which they pay nothing, says the "National Advertiser." Truly the Newburgh newspaper men have good cause to criticize the methods of some people who should be more exacting in their demands. If they expect "free notices," the least they can do is to patronize newspaper offices where job printing is done also. And it isn't only organizations, etc. that are guilty, either. Some busi-

WHEAT THIEVES.
Four More Now in Jail at Metropolis.—Seven in the Gang.
The Illinois authorities are hot after wheat thieves. Yesterday Owen Dunning, colored, and his two sons, and a colored boy named Wilson, were arrested on a charge of complicity in the theft of twenty-two sacks of wheat from Mr. Shelby Corley, of near Unionville. Another darkey was arrested last week for being implicated in the same steal.

Some of the stolen wheat, it is alleged, was found concealed under Dunning's house, and one of the prisoners has made a full confession, implicating two other colored men, for whom the officers are now in search. All the men live in Springfield, and those arrested are in jail at Metropolis.

A Mysterious Skull.

Address to the Patrons of the Colored Schools of Paducah.
To the patrons of the public schools and to the friends of education generally:
We the colored teachers of Paducah including those who teach elsewhere in McCracken County, desire to return our thanks for your support during the past years we have taught among you.

A school which does not receive the co-operation of the community, is of little importance. The children will fail to receive what is due them. We therefore ask your co-operation in the future to the end that your children may be properly educated. A child is half educated when it enters school. It has a language to express its thoughts. It has its mother's ideas of government. About all a teacher can do is to cultivate and develop what the child brings himself. A child twelve years old knows a great many good things. A great many truths, and the teachers desire to keep him investigating truths as long as he is in school. A child at that age knows a great many things it should not know. Why? Many of them learn things in their homes, on the streets, and in other places they should not know. It is much more difficult to unroot an evil and fill its place with a truth than it is to plant a truth where no evil existed.

The child learns many more things in his home, among his associates, in the community where he lives. Good and evil then it is possible for him to learn during the short term he is in school. What one learns of books is a very small part of his education. Education is divided into three parts, moral, intellectual and physical. A moral education is one half of a person's education. An intellectual education is three tenths of it. A physical education is two tenths of it. All of these parts of education are presented in school. All of them combined amounts in the end to the truth, the laws of nature, the laws of God. A child learns infinitely more of these out of school than it is possible for his teacher to teach him. It is very important, therefore, for patrons and the community to take things under consideration and to do what they can for the upbuilding of the children. All good citizens will certainly do what they can for their children, for the schools. Our thanks are due to Prof. Rouse, who has labored so earnestly with us in the institute. The Board of Education has our thanks for the use of the buildings. We thank the pastor and the members of the Seventh street Baptist church for permitting us the use of their church. We feel ourselves under many obligations to the teachers of Metropolis for their visit to our institute and promise to visit them in the near future. Again thanking our patrons for their co-operation in the past, and believing that our past efforts are commended by them, we feel assured of their support in the future.

Whereas, We have been so ably instructed by Prof. E. W. Benton in a manner that has been absolutely satisfactory to all;
Whereas, Knowing him as we do and his qualification for institute work, therefore be it
Resolved, That this institute pray God's blessing to rest upon him wherever he may go, or in whatever field of labor he may be engaged. Therefore be it
Resolved, That the teachers of McCracken county recommend him as a suitable instructor for any of the counties of the state.

THE INSTITUTE.
The Grand Army of the Republic in session at Buffalo had a busy day Thursday, and received several interesting reports. The '98 encampment was won by Cincinnati after a hard struggle, and J. B. Gobin, of Pennsylvania, was chosen Commander-in-chief.
Nebraska Republicans nominated Hon. A. M. Post for Associate Justice. The platform ignores the money question for the reason, as expressed by a member of the Resolutions Committee, "that the silver question is a dead issue."
